

Culture, Language and Literature the Inseparable Entities

Jaffer Shah (Lecturer, Department of English Balochistan Agriculture College Quetta, Pakistan)

Syed Hussain Shah (Lecturer, Department of Education Govt Boys Inter College, Brewery Road Quetta)

Abstract:

Culture, language and literature are the entities that function together in a common setting for the furtherance of human values and traditions. These are the instruments which function as mirror to the society in which they exist. They are voice to human communication and the reflection of their productivity, capability, inner thoughts, and congenital talents. They together provide a true basis to a sound society. This paper is meant to explore the inter relationship between culture, language and literature and the nature of relationship between them. In the light of the earlier theories and the findings of this paper show that the three entities are integral and inseparable. All languages and every literature in the world are deeply influenced by the culture in which they have their existence. Culture, language and literature are the most common things in every civilization. They are indispensable for the personality development of the civilized people. Every human being in this planet has some culture, some language and literature of which he is proud of and which explain his life style in a nut shell. Culture, language and literature cannot exist without each other: Culture is the base; language is the medium to culture and literature; while, literature is the source that reflects culture in its true spirit.

Key Words: Correlation, Culture, Language, Literature.